Cave painting at Altamira

Altamira is a cave site in Spain. The painting on the ceiling of the cave first was brought to the attention of Marcelino Saenz de Sautuola, a local landowner and an amateur archaeologist, by his daughter Maria in November 1879. The little girl was running about in the cavern and playing about here and there, while her father was digging the floor of the cave. Suddenly she noticed the paintings on the ceiling ‘Look Papa, Oxen.’ At first her father just laughed, but soon realized that some sort of paste rather than paint had been used for the paintings and become so enthusiastic that he could hardly speak. He published a booklet the following year, but for almost two decade his findings were dismissed by European archaeologists on the ground that these were too good to be ancient.
